In this poignant issue we say goodbye to the legendary Greg Lake. Doug goes to see Roger Hodgson, Alan enthuses about Black Angel Drifter and Martin Craft, John goes to see Freaks at the V&A, and Jon reads about Keith Moon and waxes lyrical about the Rolling Stones.

THE THREE COMMANDMENTS OF GONZO WEEKLY:

1. Art is as important as science and more important than money

2. There is life after (beyond and before) Pop Idol

3. Music can and sometimes does change the world

If you think those three ideas are stupid then you should probably give up reading this magazine now. Otherwise... enjoy
YER BIG ‘DECK THE HALLS WITH BOUGHS OF WASSNAME’ ALERT

This year, for a plethora of reasons, mostly concerned with family matters, there will be a slightly different Yuletide publishing schedule than usual:

The bumper Christmas Issue (#213/4) will be published on or about the 17th December, following which issue 215 will come out on the 7th January.

This will give the editorial staff time to embalm themselves in brandy or whatever takes their fancy.

Dear Friends,

Here we go with another issue of yer favourite magazine. Or at least what I hope is yer favourite magazine, because it certainly is mine. Well, the Bulletin of the Amateur Entomological Society in the early 1980s was slightly more to my taste at that time, but I am n't picking. I am very proud of this magazine and it has fulfilled most of my long term dreams of what a music and cultural based periodical should be like. The fact that we do it on a budget of nothing every Goddamned week of the year still never ceases to amaze me. Yay us!

Edmund Cooper (30 April 1926 – 11 March 1982) was an English poet and prolific writer of speculative fiction, romances, technical essays, several detective stories, and a children's book. These were published under his own name and several pen names. Cooper was among the 100-plus authors in Gollancz’s "SF Gateway" initiative to "make thousands of out-of print titles by classic genre authors available as eBooks", which started in October 2011. An omnibus was published in 2014 in the "SF Gateway Omnibus" series, with an introduction adapted from the entry in the online "Encyclopedia of Science Fiction".

The blurb in the back if his 1970 novel Kronk reads:

"P939 — the greatest venereal disease in the history of mankind.

The day Gabriel Chrome [sic], a failed book sculptor contemplating his suicide on the Thames Embankment, stumbled on the suicide bid of the naked Camilla Greylaw, was a day of hopeful redemption for a corrupt and violent world.

For the lovely form that he chanced to preserve was the sole carrier of a contagious venereal disease. A bug which could inhibit the aggressive instinct, rendering total placidity in all humans.

At once Gabriel’s life has new meaning and purpose. To save mankind becomes his hardened ambition. But mankind seems far from hope.”

It takes place in a dystopian future London where you can get raped on reality TV, where the skyscape is dominated by a euthanasia centre named the Bertrand Russell Twilight Tower and where there’s a statue to Sir Michael Jagger on the Thames Embankement.

Oh how we larfed. Ho Ho Ho at the surreal jape. How could pop culture’s pubic enema #1 ever hope to be bonked on the shoulder by Her Maj brandishing a sword? Preposterous.

My dear adopted nephew Max comes to visit us most years during what is euphemistically known as ‘The Festive Season’. And we usually end up sitting up all night, drinking milk from the Kentucky Cow and listening to music, and a few years ago I introduced young Maximilian to the music of The Rolling Stones. More specifically to Beggars Banquet, Exile on Main Street and Sticky Fingers.

He was surprised. Because to people of his generation The Rolling Stones were a wrinkly old joke; a somewhat vulgar cabaret act. And the sad truth is that the band’s great moments have been few and far between since Black and Blue in 1976. But on that boozy New Year’s Eve I introduced young Max to one of the great mysteries of life.

It is weird enough that a generation of white and urban and middle class art students from the Thames Estuary picked up in the music made by middle aged rural black men from a generation or two before, but there is something much weirder. How did a small percentage of these aforementioned white art student types pick up on the hoodoo of the impoverished south, and make invocatory swamp soul music as black as night and as unearthly as any Santeria ceremony, when they came from Penge or Dartford? Not many of them managed it: Graham Bond did it occasionally, but the band who did it most were The Rolling Stones.

Blue & Lonesome is a covers album by the Rolling Stones—their 23rd British and 25th American studio album—released on 2 December 2016. It is the band’s first album to feature only cover songs. It is their first studio release since 2005’s A Bigger Bang. "Just Your Fool", a Little Walter cover, was released as the first single from the album on 6 October. Eric Clapton has contributed guitar on two tracks.
In April 2016, at the launch of the Rolling Stones career retrospective Exhibitionism, the band confirmed their new album due to be released "some time in the autumn". Richards said the album would feature "a lot of Chicago blues". Eric Clapton plays guitar on two tracks. Clapton was recording his own album in the same studio as the Stones were and was asked to play on a few tracks. The album is entirely blues-based, consisting of covers of artists such as Howlin' Wolf and Little Walter.

This is the first album since Dirty Work to not feature any guitar playing from Jagger (who instead concentrates completely on vocals and harmonica) and also the first since "It's Only Rock 'n Roll" to not feature a lead vocal from Richards.

Blues is a much maligned genre of music, and has been so debased by generations of crappy pub bands, that it is sometimes difficult to remember what a primal and thrilling medium it can be. And listening to this new album by the band who were once hailed as a very real threat to western civilisation, a great deal of it does, indeed, sound like a very expensive pub band.

But there are three or four tracks that sound truly frightening, tracks upon which the band have not only recovered their mojo, but sound like they have gone down to the crossroads, had an assignation with the cornute one, and battered him to death with Keith’s guitar. Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I shall fear no evil, because I am the meanest son-of-a-bitch in the valley, or rather the band are. Because on three or four songs here, they truly not only sound dangerous for the first time in decades, but have recaptured the truly invocatory dark spirituality that I for one thought had gone forever.

Please allow them to introduce themselves. They are men of wealth, who are currently showing themselves also to be men of taste.

This is quite simply the best magazine you will ever find that is edited by a mad bloke (and his small orange cat), and produced from a tumbledown potato shed on the outskirts of a tiny village that nobody’s heard of in North Devon. The fact that it is published with Gonzo Multimedia - probably the grooviest record company in the known universe - is merely an added bonus.

Now is an even better time than usual to subscribe because, not only is it FREE (yes, Oxford English Dictionary free, not yer usual publisher free which means that we sell all the mailing list emails that we garner to a company trying to flog Viagra and/or Double Glazing).

No this is FREE as in Gratis. Not a Sausage. But I digress. So make an old hippy a happy chappy and SUBSCRIBE TODAY.

It is simple; my name is Jon and I'm the editor of the Gonzo Multimedia daily online bloggything, and wot a long, strange trip it is gonna be...

I keep on thinking that I ought to have some sort of a mission statement in each issue, but it is more than a little difficult to do one.

Basically, (if you don't mind me sounding more like a wishy washy old hippy than my haircut in the photograph on the previous page would imply) I think that books and music are immensely important.

I look around and see that we are living in a world where the things that I think are important are valued less and less by society as a whole; a world where asinine gameshows and so-called reality TV (which is actually a complete oxymoron, but don't get me started) are of more importance to most people than anything of cultural or spiritual value.

I am also very disappointed by much of what the contemporary music press puts out, and I decided many years ago, that probably the only way I could read the things that I want to read, would be to publish them myself.

So this is what I have been doing for much of my life. I am also naive enough to think that music and art can change the world, and as the world is in desperate need of change, I am gonna do my best to help.
You will be delighted with the long awaited animation of The Shuttleworths, available at only £2.99. It's the perfect stocking filler (well, it would be if it wasn't a download!) but it's a must for all John Shuttleworth fans. And who could resist the charms of the Shuttleworth Slam stopper/Worthington Window Wedge, made out of wood from a forest that's certified. Oo, does that mean the forest is mad? I do hope not! Anyway, it's only 4 quid. And there's many more bargains to be found here in the JSAS Christmas shop. Beat the rush by entering now!

http://www.shuttleworths.co.uk/pages/shop.html

I do hope you're enjoying John's new radio series, John Shuttleworth's Lounge Music, which isn't so new now, as they've just aired programme 3 in which Nick Heyward persuaded me to lie down on John's kitchen floor, but I didn't turn into a dolphin, which was most disappointing. Confused? Listen again to that show and the previous two programmes here - http://www.bbc.co.uk/programmes/b084fs5y/episodes/player

Incidentally, John's fabulous new song, The Hardware Store from the first show starring Chris Difford was on Pick Of The Week and can be heard again here: http://www.bbc.co.uk/programmes/b083l8mw

Finally, all the dates for John forthcoming live tour, My Last Will And Tasty Mint, are now on sale. For a full list of engagements and link to the venue near you, please click on this: http://www.shuttleworths.co.uk/pages/tour.html. Hope to see you there!

Finally, John (and little old me!) appear in a series of fascinating Waterfront podcasts which celebrate the work of the Canal & River Trust, introduced by the inimitable David Bramwell! Subscribe to Waterfront on iTunes so you don't miss the next episode. It's really good,
"Capitalism is the extraordinary belief that the nastiest of men for the nastiest of motives will somehow work for the benefit of all."

I'll be in touch in the New Year with more gossip of the John Shuttleworth variety, including news of a new song compilation CD (about blinkin' time, I hear you cry). Also, an up and coming TV appearance - of the dramatic variety! I can give no further details at present, because none are present presently, therefore I can't present them!

(Oof, I'm doing it again, sorry!) Right, I'm off to wrap a present... doh, done it again!

Have a lovely Yuletide, and catch you in the new Year.

WHO GONZO? WHY GONZO? WHAT GONZO?

What? You don't know who Hunter Thompson is/was/might have been/will be? Without Hunter Thompson there would be no Gonzo Multimedia. It would have been completely different and that would have been an unforgivable pity. So here is:

- A potted history of his life and works
- Rob Ayling explains why he called his company 'Gonzo'

C.J. Stone suggested that as well as explaining Gonzo to those who don't understand, we should do a weekly quote from the man himself...

“There are times, however, and this is one of them, when even being right feels wrong. What do you say, for instance, about a generation that has been taught that rain is poison and sex is death? If making love might be fatal and if a cool spring breeze on any summer afternoon can turn a crystal blue lake into a puddle of black poison right in front of your eyes, there is not much left except TV and relentless masturbation. It's a strange world. Some people get rich and others eat shit and die.”

HERE AM I FLOATING IN A TIN CAN:
“Ground control to Major Tom” indeed. In a remarkable coincidence astronaut Buzz Aldrin, the second man on the moon, has been treated by Dr David Bowie in a New Zealand hospital after being evacuated from the South Pole. Aldrin’s manager and mission control director Christina Korp has posted about the bizarre collision of names on her Facebook account. “Thank heaven @TheRealBuzz’s doctor is David Bowie. You can’t make this stuff up,” she wrote.

COOL 4 CATS: South-London legends Squeeze have announced an extensive run of UK dates kicking off on Oct 7th 2017 at Birmingham Symphony Hall and ending on Nov 6th 2017 at the Royal Albert Hall. This follows the success of their North American tour in 2016 and the incredible reception to their latest album Cradle To The Grave. The band are currently working on a new album for 2017. Chris Difford tells us “I’m excited to say Squeeze are planning a new album release and a UK tour for 2017. As I put pencil to paper to write some ideas for the next album I have to say how confident I am about our bands future. I’m excited that Nine Below Zero are opening up for us as they’re a band I have a huge amount of respect for. At last something to look forward to in 2017!”

THE BITCH IS BACK: Elton John has
laughed off reports suggesting he is planning to retire from music after another round of shows. The legendary singer took to social media to calm the fears of his fans after media outlets claimed he would be stepping out of the limelight next year (17). In a post on Instagram on Saturday (03Dec16), Elton shared a photo of himself from the 1960s with longtime musical partner Bernie Taupin, and wrote: "Don’t believe what you read in the papers today. There is no truth to the rumors (sic) that I am planning to retire. In fact, I am looking forward to celebrating 50 years of collaborating with my partner-in-song, Bernie Taupin, next year." The Daily Mail reported the Candle in the Wind hitmaker was going to quit showbiz after his landmark 70th birthday in March (17). Sources told the newspaper Elton "has seen and done it all, and has nothing to prove", and would take a permanent break in his relentless touring schedule and call it a day. Read on...

PRINCE OF THIEVES: Prince’s estate executors have racked up $2.3 million (£1.8 million) in legal bills in a three-month period. Bremer Trust bank bosses were placed in charge of the superstar’s estate following his death from a drug overdose in April (16), when he passed away without leaving a will. They have since been tasked with handling a variety of issues, including establishing the legitimacy of alleged heirs and turning Prince’s Paisley Park compound in Minnesota into a museum for fans. Now officials have filed papers asking a judge to approve funding to cover the cost of bills from 1 July (16) to 30 September (16). In court documents obtained by TMZ.com, Bremer Trust executives reveal handling "the complexity of the problems involved" is a costly job, and requires the services of a number of top legal eagles. The biggest invoice came from lawyers at Stinson Leonard Street, who sent the estate a bill for more than $1.84 million (£1.46 million). Read on...

AN OLD RAINCOAT: Today the Isle of Wight Festival 2017 have announced Rod Stewart to headline on Sunday 11th June in his only UK festival appearance next year. He has been delighting fans at sold out concerts up and down the UK as part of his ‘From Gasoline Alley to Another Country Hits’ arena tour. Rod Stewart will bring his spectacular live show to the festival for the first time, performing a set of both classics and new hits in his dazzling signature style. As one of the best-selling artists in the history of recorded music, with over 200 million records sold worldwide his performance will include show-stopping classics spanning five decades including ‘Maggie May, Da Ya Think I’m Sexy, Baby Jane, the First Cut is the Deepest and I Don’t Want to Talk About It’. Festival-goers will also be treated to tracks from his recently released critically acclaimed platinum album ‘Another Country’, which debuted at Number Two last year. Rod Stewart said: ‘I have been very lucky to have played many of the world’s finest venues and festivals - but never played the legendary IOW Festival. I am so excited to put that right. June can’t come round soon enough.’ Read on...
It is both sad and shameful that when night falls and the setts of southern England stir, their gentle folk will be needlessly slaughtered. That in spite of science and public will, the wrath of ignorance will further bloody and bleed our countryside of its riches of life. That brutalist thugs, liars and frauds will destroy our wildlife and dishonour our nation's reputation as conservationists and animal lovers. I feel sick, sad, disempowered, betrayed, angry and crushed by the corruption of all that I know as right.

Gonzo Web Radio started off as a medium by which interviews and radio programmes about the various acts covered by Gonzo Multimedia could be broadcast to an eagerly attentive world.

But over the past few years, it has become more than that. We now host regular weekly shows by Neil Nixon, a lecturer in professional writing at North West Kent College who uses his weekly radio show, Strange Fruit, as a learning experience for his students on the Foundation Course. I’ve known Neil for years, and he approached me with the idea of syndicating his show.

I agreed, and then the floodgates opened. We have regular weekly shows from Tim and Jaki on their submarine, and from the mysterious M Destiny on the other side of the pond with Friday Night Progressive. We also have a regular visit to the world of the Canterbury Scene courtesy of our friend Matthew Watkins. There are several other shows in the wings, waiting to join us, so stay glued to your seats boys and girls, your life is never going to be the same again!

Strange Fruit is a unique two-hour radio show exploring the world of underground, strange and generally neglected music. All shows are themed and all shows set out to give the most hardened of sound-hounds some new delight to sample.

The show is also unique in providing homework for undergraduate students on North West Kent College’s Foundation Degree in Professional Writing (who dig up many of the odd facts featured in the links between tracks).

Neil Nixon, the founder and co-presenter of the show has released a book about rare albums for Gonzo Multimedia.

Martin Stone
(1946 – 2016)

Stone was an English guitarist, and rare book dealer. He initially wanted to be a journalist and began as a cub reporter on The Croydon Advertiser, interviewing Jimmy Page when he was still a session musician. Stone’s passion for the guitar led him to become a musician.

Stone played in many groups, including Junior’s Blues Band, Stone’s Masonry, Almost Presley. The Action, Savoy Brown Blues Band, Mighty Baby, Snakefinger, Chilli Willi and the Red Hot Peppers, Les Soucoupes violentes, Southern Comfort, Pink Fairies, the The 101ers, Wreckless Eric, and the Gibson Girls. He continued to play, backing Marianne Faithfull in her live performances, lead guitar in the French band Almost Presley and others. We was also given consideration as a possible replacement for Brian Jones in the Rolling Stones.

By the 1980s Stone was earning much of his living as a bookseller, with an almost uncanny knack for finding ‘lost’ or famous books. He was a great fan of M. P. Shiel, who first inspired his passion for book collecting and later book-selling. He achieved international notoriety as a bookrunner. He was a major player in John Baxter’s memoir A Pound of Paper: Confessions of a Book Addict, and was the subject of a limited edition photographic book Martin Stone, Bookscout by the California rare bookseller Peter Howard of Serendipity Books.

He was also known to be the basis for the character Nicholas Lane in Sinclair’s novel White Chappell, Scarlet Tracings (1987).

He died on 9th November in Versailles, France.

Gregory Stuart "Greg" Lake
(1947 – 2016)

Lake was an English singer, musician, songwriter, and producer. At age 12, Lake first learned to play the guitar and wrote his first song, "Lucky Man", which he did not write down and committed it to memory. He took up work loading and unloading cargo at the Poole docks, and as a draughtsman for a short period, before decided to become a full time musician at the age of 17. He joined his first band, Unit Four, playing cover songs as their singer and guitarist, through 1965, and following their split, Lake then became a member of The Shame, where he is featured on their single, "Don't Go Away Little Girl", written by Janis Ian. Following a brief stint in

THOSE WE HAVE LOST
In the 1960s, Lake formed a friendship with future King Crimson co-founder and guitarist Robert Fripp. When Fripp formed King Crimson, he chose Lake to be the singer and bassist. This marked Lake's first time playing the instrument as he had primarily been a guitarist for the previous eleven years. Though Peter Sinfield was the band's lyricist, Lake had some involvement in the lyrics for their debut album In the Court of the Crimson King. After their contracted producer Tony Clarke walked away from the project, Lake produced the album.

King Crimson supported In the Court of the Crimson King with a tour of the UK and the US, with some of the shows featuring rock band The Nice as the opening act. During the US leg Lake struck up a friendship with Nice keyboardist Keith Emerson and the two shared similar musical interests and talked about the benefits of forming a new group. When King Crimson returned to the UK in early 1970, Lake agreed to sing on the band's second album, In the Wake of Poseidon, and appear on the music television show Top of the Pops with them, performing the song "Cat Food".

In April 1970, Lake left King Crimson and reunited with Emerson, along with drummer Carl Palmer of The Crazy World of Arthur Brown and Atomic Rooster to form a progressive rock supergroup, Emerson, Lake & Palmer. As well as bass, Lake contributed acoustic and electric guitar work to Emerson Lake & Palmer, and his voice had a wider and more diverse range than anything The Nice had recorded.

In 1975, while still a member of ELP, Lake achieved solo chart success when his single, "I Believe in Father Christmas", reached number two on the UK Singles Chart. It has become a Yuletide perennial.

In 2001, Lake toured as a member of the seventh incarnation of Ringo Starr & His All-Starr Band. In 2003, Lake played the bass on The Who song "Real Good Looking Boy". In 2005, Lake toured Germany and the UK with his assembled group, the Greg Lake Ban, which included David Arch on keyboards, Florian Opahle on guitar, Trevor Barry on bass, and Brett Morgan on drums. In 2006, Lake played as a member of the supergroup The RD Crusaders in aid for charity.

In 2010, Lake and Emerson completed an acoustic world tour, performing ELP songs, and in July 2010, Lake joined Emerson and Palmer for a one-off gig from Emerson, Lake & Palmer at the High Voltage Festival in Victoria Park, London, to commemorate the band's fortieth anniversary.

Lake continued to tour solo in the 2010s. On 9 January 2016, he was awarded an honorary degree in music and lyrics composition by Conservatorio Nicolini in Piacenza, Italy, the first degree awarded by the conservatory.

Lake died on 7th December at the age of 69 after suffering from cancer.

Tyruss Himes
(1968 – 2016)

Himes, better known by his stage name Big Syke, was an American rapper. His stage name is a revision of his childhood nickname, “Little Psycho”.

In 1990, Big Syke started a rap group called Evil Mind Gangstas with rappers Domino and Mental illness. He met 2Pac in 1992, and joined 2Pac's group Thug Life, after Evil Mind Gangstas only album, All Hell Breakin' Loose, was released. After Thug Life broke up, and after 2Pac was released... from prison, Big Syke appeared on four tracks on 2Pac’s All Eyez on Me album—"Picture Me Rollin’", "When We Ride", "All Eyez on Me" and "Check Out Time". He joined a second 2Pac group, Outlawz, adopting the name Mussolini.

On December 5, 2016, Syke was found dead at his home, with reports indicating natural causes.

Herbert Hardesty (1925 – 2016)

Hardesty was an American musician who played tenor saxophone and trumpet, and is best known for his association with the New Orleans pianist Fats Domino and the producer Dave Bartholomew, beginning in 1948. He released six 45-rpm records as Herb Hardesty between 1959 and 1962.

He began trumpet lessons in school at the age of six and used a trumpet given to his stepfather by Louis Armstrong. He also took lessons from Professor Valmore Victor and began playing in a local Works Progress Administration big band. By 1939, he was getting paid to play with bands led by Papa Celestin, Sidney Desvigne, and others.

Hardesty enlisted in the military in 1941 even though he was two years below the minimum draft age, and at the United States Army Air Corps base in Jackson, Mississippi, he volunteered to play saxophone in the band, and his commanding officer purchased an alto saxophone, which Hardesty learned to play in two days.

In 1955, Bartholomew asked Hardesty to begin touring with Fats Domino. When the band played at the 5-4 Ballroom in Los Angeles, in March 1955, a photographer took a picture of Hardesty playing tenor sax on his back, and it appeared in the April 18, 1955, issue of Life magazine.

Hardesty’s solo recordings began in 1957, and he also co-wrote the title track of Fats Domino’s 1964 album, Fats on Fire. Hardesty continued to tour with Domino until 1971, and in 1973, he played trumpet with the Duke Ellington Orchestra in Las Vegas and was a member of the Count Basie Orchestra for six months, playing tenor saxophone. He became a member of the house band at the Hilton Hotel and backed vocalists including Tony Bennett, Ella Fitzgerald, and Frank Sinatra.

In 1978, the drummer Earl Palmer invited Hardesty to record with Tom Waits for the album Blue Valentine. He was a member of Waits’s quartet in 1978 and 1979, touring in the United States, Europe and Australia. He played more trumpet than tenor sax.

Hardesty rejoined Domino from about 1980 until 2005 and can be heard on numerous live recordings released during these years. He played tenor sax on Dr. John’s 1992 album Goin’ Back to New Orleans. Hardesty continued to perform in Las Vegas, and died on December 3rd, 2016 at the age of 91.

Micky Fitz (1959 (?) - 2016)

Fitz was frontman of The Business; an English Oi!
Wayne Duncan
(? – 2016)

Duncan was bassist and vocalist for Australian rock band, Daddy Cool. The band was formed in Melbourne in 1970, their debut single being "Eagle Rock", which was released in May 1971 and stayed at number 1 on the Australian singles chart for ten weeks. Their debut July 1971 LP Daddy Cool also reached number 1 and became the first Australian album to sell more than 100,000 copies. Their name comes from the 1957 song "Daddy Cool" by US rock group The Rays.

Daddy Cool's music featured 1950s Doo-wop style rock cover versions and originals. Duncan and Gary Young were the rhythm section of many bands particularly instrumentals since the 1950s. One of these was The Rondells which were also the backing band for Bobby & Laurie a popular singing duo with their number 1 hit "Hitch Hiker" from 1966.

Young and Wilson met in 1969 whilst both were working in a book warehouse, each had previous band mates who were interested in forming a new group. Duncan, along with Wilson, Hannaford, Young formed Sons of the Vegetal Mother later in 1969, and this band had a more experimental Progressive rock sound. Duncan died on 4 December 2016 following a stroke.
On October 29, 1998, while still a sitting senator, he became the oldest person to fly in space, and the only one to fly in both the Mercury and Space Shuttle programs, when at age 77, he flew as a Payload Specialist on Discovery mission STS-95. He was awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom in 2012. He died on 8th December, aged 95.

John Herschel Glenn Jr.

Glenn was an American aviator, engineer, astronaut, and United States Senator from Ohio. He was one of the “Mercury Seven” group of military test pilots selected in 1959 by NASA to become America’s first astronauts and fly the Project Mercury spacecraft.

On February 20, 1962, Glenn flew the Friendship 7 mission and became the first American to orbit the Earth and the fifth person in space, after cosmonauts Yuri Gagarin and Gherman Titov and the sub-orbital flights of Mercury astronauts Alan Shepard and Gus Grissom. Glenn was the earliest-born American to go to orbit, and the second earliest-born man overall after Soviet cosmonaut Georgy Beregovoy. Glenn received the Congressional Space Medal of Honor in 1978, and was inducted into the U.S. Astronaut Hall of Fame in 1990. Glenn was the last surviving member of the Mercury Seven after the death of Scott Carpenter in 2013.

Glenn resigned from NASA on January 16, 1964, and the next day announced plans to run for a U.S. Senate seat from Ohio; however, a bathroom fall which resulted in a concussion caused him to withdraw from the race in March. He retired from the Marine Corps on January 1, 1965. A member of the Democratic Party, he finally won election to the Senate in 1974 and served through January 3, 1999.

Peter Vaughan
(1923 – 2016)

Born Peter Ewart Ohm, Vaughan was an English character actor, known for many supporting roles in British film and television productions, as well as working extensively on the stage. He was best known for his role as Grouty in the sitcom Porridge (despite appearing in only three episodes and the 1979 film) and also had a recurring role alongside Robert Lindsay in Citizen Smith. He also had parts as Tom Franklin in Chancer, playing the father of Anthony Hopkins’s character in The Remains of the Day, and as Maester Aemon in Game of Thrones.

After leaving school he joined Wolverhampton Repertory theatre and gained experience in other repertory theatres before army service in the Second World War. He was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Royal Corps of Signals on 9 June 1943, and served in Normandy, Belgium and the Far East. At the end of the war, he was in Singapore and present during the liberation of Changi Prison. His film debut came in 1959 in an uncredited role as a police officer in The 39 Steps, and he continued to play small roles for several years, before gaining his first starring role in 1964.

He died on 6th December at the age of 93.

Evangelos Odysseas Papathanassiou, born 29 March 1943, known professionally as Vangelis, is a Greek composer of electronic, progressive, ambient, jazz, and orchestral music. He is best known for his Academy Award-winning score for the film Chariots of Fire, composing scores for the films Blade Runner, Missing, Antarctica, 1492: Conquest of Paradise, and Alexander, and the use of his music in the PBS documentary Spirits Burning and Clearlight.

Spirits Burning, the brain child of multi instrumentalist producer Don Falcone team up with the legendary Clearlight (aka equally legendary Prog artist Cyrille Verdeaux) for a second album of delightful grooves together. Don Falcone (born November 5th, 1958) is an American musician and producer. Originally a poet-performer in Pennsylvania, he relocated to San Francisco at the beginning of the 1980s. He was a member of Thessalonians and the original Melting Euphoria, had a solo project called Spaceship Eyes, and since 1996 has led the Spirits Burning space rock collective. Various cable and TV network programs have also used Falcone’s music. Cyrille, however, has been producing fantastic music since 1975, sometimes with various members of Gong. Put these two musical Giants together and the grooviest of sparks are going to fly! What’s not to like?
Atomic Rooster are an English rock band, originally formed by members of The Crazy World of Arthur Brown, organist Vincent Crane and drummer Carl Palmer. Throughout their history, keyboardist Vincent Crane was the only constant member, and wrote the majority of their material. Their history is defined by two periods: the early-mid-1970s and the early 1980s. The band went through radical style changes, however they are best known for the hard, progressive rock sound of their hit singles, "Tomorrow Night" (UK No. 11) and "The Devil's Answer" (UK No. 4), both in 1971. This record presents them live at their blistering best.

Al Atkins is best known for being the original singer with Midlands heavy rockers Judas Priest with a wife and young daughter to support and no record deal in sight, Atkins was forced "to get a haircut and a 9-to-5 job" in May 1973.

He was replaced by Rob Halford, who found himself singing many songs that were originally written by Atkins. Consequently, the album Rocka Rolla gives a portrait of Atkins' original vision for the band. Atkins eventually formed another band, Lion and went solo after it dissolved, releasing four albums in the 1990s and a final, fifth album in 2007 as a solo artist.

Despite being at the age that most men are thinking of retirement, Al is still one of the hardest rocking frontmen on the planet, as this album bears testament.

Mie DeGagne writes: "Musically depicting certain historical events and places, Time Machine spotlights Rick Wakeman in his most familiar territory, as his whirlwind keyboard attack takes on a rock & roll feel across numerous conceptual pieces. Adding his instrumental fervor to such legendary occurrences as "Custer's Last Stand" and the ice age (in a track simply titled "Ice"), Wakeman's barrage of heavy synthesizer with front-end-center percussion gives this album its hardened, rock-induced edge. Guest vocalists John Parr, Tracey Ackerman, Ashley Holt, and Roy Wood of Wizzard are pleasant additions to the synthesized entanglements, especially Parr's contributions on "Ocean City" and the powerful "Rock Age."

Majestic Wakeman captured on this timeless radio broadcast. Features a great show with tracks from Six Wives, Journey and Myths. Sound quality is superb as The English Rock Ensemble and Rick are in fine form.

Here we have a brand new 30th anniversary recording of Boat to Bolivia, made at The Tolbooth, Stirling 2016.

The idea was to celebrate the albums 30th with a fresh live sound, the band has never been hotter and truly creates a great take on this classic record, where the songs are just as timeless as the day of it’s release, bearing in mind, most of the songs would have been written between 1980 & 1982! The Daintees showed an incredible range and idiosyncrasy for such young recording artists, and some of the guitar solos John Steel created back then are still etched in the ears of the listener since this truly weird album’s release!

It’s wonderful hearing his 2nd takes with a 30 year distance, just outrageously good man! Here the artist gives you a 30 year gap between original and new, with the original guitarist on both albums Mr John Steel, who left the band after its recording, never to surface till some 15 years later, Martin wrote the song ‘Goodbye John’ for him, which featured on following classic album ‘Gladsome, Humour and Blue’ for his missing friend. It was Anthony’s brother Gary who joined the band in early 1986 to tour the album and then play on the next three of The Daintees major and awesome releases.

Also on this new version we have John Steel’s wife Kate Stephenson on drums, who has been with the band for over ten years now, worked closely with Sam Brown, Herbie Flowers and Midge Ure before teaming up with Martin and the gang, another weird thing is, Martin’s childhood friend and Bassist Christopher Mordey, who only played Bass on Daintees very first single release Roll on Summertime, who also played on Martin’s first 1978 demo of ‘Neon Skies’ recorded at Newcastle’s Spectro Art’s Centre, so Chris is a hardcore Daintee and is arguably, along with Anthony Dunn, the first Bass player of The Daintees, so has a very authentic and valid connection.

In 1970, Barbara Dickson and Archie Fisher were invited by Decca Records to record a new album of traditional music. The resulting set, ‘Thro’ The Recent Years The Folk Experiences of Archie Fisher and Barbara Dickson,’ has since gone on to become an acclaimed collector’s item for fans of traditional music but despite its popularity this release marks its first ever release on CD outside of Japan.

Digitally remastered from the original master recordings, ‘Thro The Recent Years’ features fourteen superb tracks including Bob Dylan’s ‘Tears of Rage’ as well as a selection of new songs by Archie and Scottish folk stalwart Rab Noakes (who also provides guitar and backing vocals on the album.) ‘Thro’ The Recent Years’ is produced by the legendary Ray Horricks whose long career as a producer included albums with Rod Stewart, Sammy Davis, Jr and Anthony Newley. The CD booklet features a new interview with Barbara in which she looks back over her career in Folk music from her earliest days performing at the Howff in...
Dunfermline, through to her early recordings and influences and the eventual big break which took her on to become one of the most successful and well-loved singers of her generation.

Legendary Greg Lake sadly passed away on Wed. Dec. 7th. As a founding member of King Crimson and Emerson, Lake & Palmer, Greg Lake has been a major force in music for over 40 years. He has long been considered a legendary voice and musical powerhouse whose impact changed the landscape of rock and roll. Many simply refer to him as “The Voice”.

Says his long time manger and friend Stewart Young,

“Yesterday, December 7th, I lost my best friend to a long and stubborn battle with cancer. Greg Lake will stay in my heart forever, as he has always been. Despite his illness which he knew to be terminal he always took the view about his life, career and family that he was indeed a lucky man... His family would be grateful for privacy during this time of their grief. Many thanks.”

Greg was just finishing his autobiography titled “Lucky Man”, which is scheduled for release in 2017.
ERIK NORLANDER:
I met him a few times through Keith and ELP, but I wouldn't say I knew him.

I did have one cool experience in the early 90s when I was doing some synth programming for Keith on one of those ELP reunion tours.

At one of the rehearsals, I ended up getting drafted into programming some stuff for Carl's electronic drum pads on his Akai S1100 sampler (big timpani and tam tam hits for "Fanfare," IIRC). I was sitting on the floor working on Carl's rack next to his kit ... basically about 4 feet from Greg's vocal mic which was stage center.

They're all bickering and pecking at each other in true ELP style, but then Greg just starts strumming the intro to "Lucky Man." Carl plays the classic intro fill, and of course Keith joins in. They play the first verse and chorus, and Greg notices me staring up at him from the floor like a puppy dog in wonderment.

I'm thinking, "You know, this might be the coolest thing ever." I give Greg a nod and a smile, and gives me a very sincere nod, smile and brow furl back, basically saying, "Yes, this is indeed the coolest thing ever."

That's my best memory of Greg.

ALAN DEARLING:
Greg Lake, Clive Palmer and Keith Emerson. Lots of form and flash quality. We are sitting in a huge field at the Isle of Wight Festival. Shed-loads of anticipation.

And then ELP erupt. We already knew Lake well from King Crimson, Emerson from The Nice, and Palmer from Arthur Brown and his Crazy World and Atomic Rooster.

They had superstar status. Possibly at the top end of prog rock, back in those days. Lots of light and shade. Some loud and extrovert passages, but subtle too.

And many of those moments of exquisite beauty came from Greg Lake who produced their first album. Greg gave us, in particular, 'Lucky Man' and 'Take a pebble'.

I think the album came out pretty much at the same time as they performed for us in that over-crowded field at the 1970 Isle of Wight event. Greg Lake gave us some special, magic moments, including his many contributions to the behemoth that became ELP. For better or worse.

Luv n' respect - Alan
JON DOWNES:
It was earlier this year, when I read an interview with Carl Palmer, about the final ELP reunion show in 2010, that I found a copy of it and watched it in horror. It was like watching a car crash, and I perfectly understood why Palmer said “If it had been just as good as it used to be, on that same level, I would have accepted that. But I don’t think it was, and I don’t think the other guys thought it was.” And so, it seemed that Palmer nixed the nascent ELP reunion before it happened.

And now, it will never happen.

But the same day I watched the footage of the band onstage at the Isle of Wight Festival in 1970, and bloody hell they were magnificent. I don’t think I had ever realised quite how awesome the band could be live. And it was only their second or third gig.

NELP were major figures in my adolescence, although I came to them quite late. One day in 1974, on the school bus, an elder boy - Richard Appleby - for whom I am indebted for my first listens to Gong, Genesis and Yes as well, played me the beginning of side two of Brain Salad Surgery and I was completely blown away. “Welcome back my friends to the show that never ends b lah blah blah”, and I can still feel the amazing sense of excitement that I felt back then. ELP were my favourite prog band, if only for that album (if you ignore Toccata which I have never even slightly got), and it has remained a favourite of mine ever since.

ELP have not gone down in history very well, being seen as a symbol of prog excess that sparked off the punk wars, although - of course - they didn’t. And - although my love for Brain Salad Surgery has never wavered - I have had a bit of a patchy relationship with much of the rest of their output, although I found it massively amusing when one of my adopted nephews confessed to me that he had been wont to use Tarkus as make out music.

I would have been too scared to approach Messrs Emerson or Palmer, but I had always wanted to interview Greg Lake, because well into his sixties he still had the voice of a choirboy, and I always imagined that he would have been the most approachable of this trio of prog rock giants. And like so many other of my professional aspirations it was never to be.

I have been quite unwell this week, and I was asleep in my armchair this morning when Corinna came in with the terrible news. In a year which has seen the heroes of my younger life being taken from me one by one, I suppose that I should have become used to the task of putting together a tribute issue at short notice. But it is not something that I think that one ever gets used to. This has been a terrible year, and I can only hope that 2017 is a better one. But a world without Lake, Bowie or Prince, will be a world where I will have three less stars of my own personal firmament to make me happy.

DOUG HARR:
That familiar melodious baritone is silenced. “In the Court of the Crimson King,” "Take a Pebble," "From the Beginning," "Jerusalem" so many beautiful, colorful works of art. Greg Lake for me over and above his skills on the frets, was a vocalist of the highest order. His voice was smooth, not harsh, his vibrato restrained, his delivery heart rending. We were fortunate that Greg wrote, produced, and performed during our time on this earth. Whether you were able to hear him on record, on film or live in concert, you are likely to feel this loss, much like fellow band mate Keith Emerson's passing earlier this year.

I've been collecting films of my rock heroes for many years now - so much is available. Now that this is the only way to see two thirds of ELP perform, the importance of these documents increases. To me, the best is their television special, taken from the Brain Salad Surgery tour.

Beyond The Beginning, Cal Jam Concert (2005), Universal, 44 min, 1.5:1

The DVD Beyond The Beginning (2005) contains a documentary of ELP, but more importantly includes the best available concert film of the band at this pivotal time. The 44-minute picture was broadcast on ABC television, taken at their last stop on the American tour when headlining at the California Jam Festival, playing for over 200,000 people. The professional color film is a top quality production for its time, featuring lengthy close-ups of fingers, sticks and picks, capturing the virtuosity of each band member.

The set list begins with Palmer and his synthesized drums playing the solo in “Toccata” after which we are treated to two of Lake’s ballads, “Still… You Turn Me On” and “Lucky Man.” Emerson’s astounding “Piano Improvisations” follow and they are caught in detail, along with the first segment of “Take A Pebble”. The real treat follows, an almost note-perfect live rendition of the 1st and 3rd impressions of the “Karn Evil 9” suite which includes a lengthy Palmer drum solo, highlighting his rotating drum riser, followed by Lake’s powerful vocals, Emerson’s polyphonic Moog leads, and the simulated destruction of the villainous computer. The film concludes with “Great Gates of Kiev” during which Emerson deploys the spinning piano stagecraft, before the coda and fireworks. Check this out, and celebrate with us the life and works of this now legendary artist.

R.I.P. Greg Lake, we will not forget you.

Roger Hodgson performed at the Spotlight 29 Indian Casino in Coachella last Saturday night, December 3, 2016 to an audience of adoring fans. It was a heart rendering, spiritual journey through a bit of Hodgson’s fine solo work, topping a generous helping of the songs he wrote for the band Supertramp.

Anyone within range of an FM radio in the 1970’s heard a lot from Supertramp. The group was led by a marriage of the uniquely talented principal members, Roger Hodgson and Rick Davies. Their breakup in 1983, which ended with Rick taking over the band, and Roger taking the highway, is one of the saddest in rock history. A decade before the split, after two early releases that were not commercially successful, the band clicked, releasing three popular masterworks in succession, Crime of the Century (1974), Crisis? What Crisis? (1975), and Even in the Quietest Moments... (1977). Each of these albums blended pop, jazz, and progressive rock music into a crowd-pleasing brew that allowed them to build a growing worldwide audience.

By the time of their best selling release Breakfast in America (1979) they were mega stars, finally getting a #1 record in the states (#3 in the UK.) Many of the songs from that album are pure pop, and they became radio staples, including the title track, “The Logical Song,” and “Take the Long Way Home.” The album also contained several deeper cuts including Hodgson's “Lord is it Mine” and “Child of Vision” - the fabulous workout for dual keys, Hodgson on Wurlitzer electric keyboard (a signature part of the album’s sound) and Davies.

on grand piano. After one more studio album ... Famous Last Words... (1982), and tour the partnership fractured.

This Hodgson solo tour was billed as the Breakfast in America show, and there was truth in that advertising, as all of the Hodgson-penned tracks listed above were included in the set list. On top of those selections, there was a generous helping of four from Crisis? What Crisis? (my absolute favorite); the one-two lead-in “Easy Does It” and “Sister Moonshine” were included with the more rare songs “Lady” and “A Soapbox Opera.” Fantastic! Key tracks from Crime of the Century, included set opener “School,” pop hit “Dreamer,” message song “If Everyone Was Listening” and arguably Hodgson’s most beautiful, heart-rending track “Hide In Your Shell” were highlights. One of Hodgson’s solo songs, “Death and a Zoo” was particularly fitting at this venue, as the message of kindness to animals was in line with Native American attitudes and music, including a tribal drum workout that shined. Closing the set, “Fool’s Overture” sated the prog crowd, while encores - “Had a Dream (Sleeping with the Enemy)” (his first solo single) and of course “Give a Little Bit” – kept everyone close to the stage and on their feet.

Hodgson was in fine voice, able to reach smoothly into his upper register, which is critical for these songs to hit their mark. His playing on keys and particularly on twelve-string acoustic guitar was impeccable. The band was very strong as they deftly brought down the volume during sensitive bits, while punching the rockier moments. As the main man is so often on keys, there are times where an additional guitarist could punch things up a bit. But for this patron listening to these songs rendered with two and sometimes three simultaneous keyboards was pure heaven.

Hodgson himself waxed philosophical, as has been his norm during the last decade as he tours as a duo or with band. He spoke plainly and warmly about the meaning of these songs, to him and to others, sometimes reading notes he’s received from fans or sharing his thoughts about how music can bring back memories, and heal troubled spirits. Truer words.

See this enduring artist while the show goes on and the quality of performance is still so outstanding – if you care for this music, or just have interest and an open heart, it will be a priceless evening.

Black Angel Drifter

There's a bit of a buzz around this band in London town. They played their first gig there last month in Leytonstone at the 'What's Cooking' venue. Their album using the 'Black Angel Drifter' moniker has just emerged into the darker, slightly skewed grunge/psych edges of the musical firmament. They've formed out of 'Morton Valence', as the self-proclaimed 'love child' of Robert 'Hacker' Jessett and Anne Gilpin, who are the vocal front-line of the band. And the original plan was apparently to only play one gig under the new name. Curious, but arty, and quite clever as a concept. I've been listening to the album during this week with my Crouch End friend, Tony, who is a fan of the band. Indeed, he's already helped book them to play a gig with his mates in the 'Braniac 5'.

So, why should you be interested in them?

It really depends on how you like your music served up. If you like MOR, pop, forget it. They are very, very dark indeed. Gothick. They seem to be serving up their music in an ethereal style akin to Ennio Morricone meeting in a kind of alternative summit with Los Lobos, the Handsome Family, Nick Cave with sonorous repetition in the percussion department from Chizuro Nukui. At times it is even somewhat reminiscent of the Velvets. Waves of pedal steel guitar, courtesy of Alan Cook, plus pounding bass-lines from Vladimir Strkalj and more guitar riffs from Masa Mitobe. They really are rather memorable, but not an easy listen. Here's their take on Dylan. A video with some real class filmed at Orford Ness beach in East Anglia, in the county of Suffolk. A vast shingle spit area punctuated with sinister ex-military buildings. It reminds me of Dungeness, which I visited quite recently. The scenery certainly fits the mood of the song and performance.

I think it classifies as Gonzo Muzak...so in advance of these few words and pics I told Jon (Downes) about them. He appears to be on their wavelength.

Jon wrote to me:

"I am listening to the album now. I don't know whether you ever heard Joe Strummer's soundtrack for 'Walker', but this sounds like a Gothic analogue of that. Fuckin A..."

Alan: "Yes indeed, Jon. Perhaps even spiritual shades of Mexican mariachi, western film themes, lots of crickets and the cracking of the bullwhip, and hints of the celebrations known as the 'Day of the Dead'."

and in a second email, Jon added:

"Something that has always mystified me is the way that white people from London and surrounding areas have managed, at various times, to plug into some weird Deep South hoodoo. At their best the stones did it, Graham Bond did it and this bunch have done it. I don't know if you have anything similar, but I have driven through the poorest, ghetto districts of Puerto Rico at sundown, and in predominantly Santeria districts of Miami and got the same vibe."

The song titles tell a part of the story: Black-eyed Susan; Sister Pain; Trail of tears, and Dylan's The man in the long black coat, who turns out to be a woman. Strangely hypnotic, and at times grimly and unrelentingly bleak, like the locations they favour.

Music that challenges, but only for the adventurous. Worth checking out Morton Valence too (named after a defunct RAF Gloucestershire airbase, Moreton Valence):

and a nice little video of Chinatown from the album 'Another country':

Editor's note: It was listening to their album concurrently with the new Rolling Stones one that inspired my slightly left of centre editorial this issue.

Psychedelia comes to SW7..........

The good old days seem to have become part of the establishment, with this ambitious multi-media exhibition set in the heart of London’s most affluent area, in the Victoria & Albert Museum. The V & A has already held a David Bowie exhibition, and next year see’s a special on Pink Floyd.

The subject here is a very large one, with both the UK and US scenes being covered, with social commentary and even questions for the future thrown in. It is not only ambitious but has clearly been put together with a lot of love. It is on until the 26th of February 2017 and if you are in town before that date, is well worth a couple of hours of your time. (Pre-book for weekends, it was very busy last Saturday afternoon for example). in the UK in the sixties, moves towards the 70s and then the penultimate, largest room, is a celebration of the Woodstock Festival, with a short film using clips from the movie, projected on different screens around the room. The film used windows within the main screen, in this room, they used different screens for the different ‘windows’ content, which worked very well. There were lots of people in there, mainly families with young children, with bean bags on the floor for the ‘real experience man’. I found it very heartening though to see so many people at the exhibition, and most of them below the age of 40 I would say. Most of them seemed to be taking their time too and were trying to absorb all the sights and sounds. I find it slightly scary though that most of the music I enjoy is now ‘history’! I’m not, yet....

The exhibition includes film clips, both news and musical performances, ‘spacey’ mannequins with clothes and musicians’ attire of the times, posters (one of the big festivals had Arthur Brown as the lead act way above all others, now he can't sell more than 100 tickets a night, go figure........), various artefacts plus examples of technology of the era. It is pointed out that most of the Californian leaders of our modern i-tech industries all emerged from this culture-changing period, Steve Jobs most famously, citing LSD as one of his most important personal experiences, plus his love of vinyl (until he co-invented the i-thingy!). He wasn't always right......Beatles fans are particularly well served unsurprisingly. A stunning Hendrix jacket can be found along the way too. I can understand the organisers not offering micro-dosing as an optional extra to enjoy the overall experience, but a bit of smell-o-vision would have (eg patchouli, weed, b.o and/or festival bogs) really been the icing on the cake.

There is the book of the exhibition of course, You Say You Want A REVOLUTION, with essays and photos from the gig (Broakes & Marsh) plus you can buy yourself a pair of the headphones (bass was lightweight) or a special pair of Levi's man, the other main commercial sponsor.

As I said at the start, the team that put this all together did it with love and reverence for their subject, and you can't say better than that really, recommended.

On the same subject, I notice London's Roundhouse has a superb revamped website, celebrating their 50 years, with lots of sections and photographs about gigs of yore, including Jefferson Airplane and The Doors. Worth a few minutes of your time if surfing the web......

Finally this week I noticed an outfit called Live Dead 69 are coming over to the UK early in 2017. They include Tom Constanten, who played keyboards on the Grateful Dead’s seminal live double album. Sounds like an interesting night out; their short visit starts in Minehead (!) on January 28th, I’m planning to see them in Basingstoke (!!!) on February 4th. More details on their FB page.

EXHIBITION: This major exhibition will explore the era-defining significance and impact of the late 1960s, expressed through some of the greatest music and performances of the 20th century alongside fashion, film, design and political activism. The exhibition considers how the finished and unfinished revolutions of the time changed the way we live today and think about the future.
He is Australian. I guess he might be pigeonholed as a singer-songwriter, but he’s also a talented composer and pianist. And he hit 40 years old in 2016. You can't accuse him of being prolific. ‘Blood Moon’, the 2016 album, is just his third, including his sophomore effort.

This is the blurb from his website: http://www.mcraftmusic.com/

Which I agree with 101%.

“Martin Craft is a songwriter, composer and music producer. Blood Moon, the new album, is a sprawling, cosmic piano epic, recorded during a year adrift in California's Mojave desert, lost in its deep silences, other -planetary landscapes, and impossibly starry skies.”

It’s not been far from my CD players since I got my grubby hands on a copy a few weeks ago. After two listens, I immediately ordered a copy of his original solo album, entitled simply, ‘M.Craft’. But getting back to Blood Moon.

It is an out-of-body sort of experience. Transcendental. Swirling, floating, and oddly sublime. It’s a varied listen; it even has some dissonant sections, ragged edges, which just seem to make the dream-like sequences more gorgeous. Overall, it feels as though it’s an album that would fit well with sitting in any desert or clear dark sky location, or, even a planetarium. It’s also music that would be at home in a film soundtrack – atmospheric, emotional and, well, just special. I listen to so many artists, many new to me, and Blood Moon is up there with the best. It reminds me of the dark and isolated territory inhabited by Nick Drake, with added touches of Eric Satie. Deeply personal and filled, and probably fuelled with, a gut-wrenching intensity.

To call it a mainly piano-centric album does it a disservice, but is accurate. It's a bold mix of ambient, maybe neo- or new-classical. Hints of Reich and Eno in there at times. Underplayed and minimalist. Definitely soundscapes. Martin Craft is apparently busy filming a night-video to accompany Blood Moon in the Joshua Tree national park in California. At the time of writing, it is still forthcoming.

It’s a massive leap forward in originality and tonality from the much earlier first solo album, Silver and Fire, released in 2006. That’s pleasant, with hints of originality, and shows a talented artist at the start of their career. But with Blood Moon, Martin Craft has graduated into the maestro category. Check it out. You’ll give yourself a treat. It’s always so sweet when we find a new artist on the block. It dispels that myth that all good music is old music!

Here’s the direct link to the floating, ethereal, ‘Chemical Trails’ the single from the Blood Moon album. Pretty. Angelic even. But I prefer it in the context of the whole album experience, where there is much more of a balance between light and dark.

THE COMPLETE GOSPELS

The Gospels evolved because Rick Wakeman was asked to perform at an organ recital to raise money for the Camberley United Reform Church, which was in desperate need of a new organ. Rick pondered what to play and the more he thought about it and what the evening should mean, the more he felt that something very special was about to take place.

Thoughts of the New Testament kept creeping into his mind and he decided to write an instrumental piece to the settings of the four Gospels. He began working but after a couple of hours realised that there was no way he was going to get across the feelings he wished to portray without singing. The music seemed to cry out for an operatic tenor.

Amazingly enough, just a few weeks earlier, Rick had met the famous tenor Ramon Remedies at a charity concert in which they both performed and he plucked up courage to ask him if he would kindly agree to perform the New Gospels with him. The concert was a tremendous success and Ramon’s feeling and understanding of the music moved many people to tears.

The complete Gospels is a limited edition box set containing all the known recordings of the project both audio and visual. Along with a reproduction A4 x 12 page concert program.

This is the most important moment in history to do something for African elephants. Because it’s the worst time in history to be an elephant.

In 1980 there were 1.2 million elephants in Africa. Now there are just 430,000 and 20,000 were killed last year alone to fuel soaring demand for ivory. About one every 20 minutes.

That’s why The Nature Conservancy has teamed up with music industry icon Martin Guitar on #SaveElephants -- a movement to provide people with simple actions to help elephants that will add up to make a difference.

Martin Guitar has been a leader in elephant protection since the 1970s when the company made the decision to stop using ivory on its guitars and started to phase the material from its supply chain. As the founding sponsor of #SaveElephants, Martin has donated five custom elephant-themed guitars for raising funds.

#SaveElephants is part of a partnership between the Conservancy’s programs in Africa and China to increase wildlife security, expand habitat, reduce demand, and reduce poverty and instability in places where elephants range -- the root cause of poaching.

Ultimately, this is bigger than elephants. Poaching spreads crime and instability, threatening lives and tourism-based income that’s desperately needed by the people who live among elephants.

We have to do more. That’s why we’re thrilled to be working with Martin Guitar -- and with you. Together, we’re powerful.

Asante sana (thank you very much),

As regular readers of these pages will probably know I have a strange, disparate, and diverse collection of friends, relatives, and associates, many of whom who are extraordinarily creative in one way or another. And as my plan was always to make this magazine the sort of magazine that I would want to read, many of them turn up in these pages with monotonous regularity. Meet Mr Biffo.

From 1993 for a decade he was the editor of an anarchic video games magazine on Channel Four Teletext. It was called Digitiser and contained some of the most gloriously funny bits of off the wall dickering about that I have ever read. Biffo happens to be a friend of mine and as the re-launched Digitiser2000 is just as stupid and just as funny as ever, we shall be featuring a slice of Biffo every week from now on.

SCRIPTS OF MY YEARS
PART SIXTEEN:
DIGITISER2000 - BY MR BIFFO

I got lucky. A bunch of successful kids’ TV shows under my belt, a hard work ethic, a stable, loving relationship with someone who's also my best friend, great mates, and fantastic kids, gave me a solid base upon which to build. The counselling course, for all its faults, gave me the impetus to pull apart everything and put it back together in the right order.

I love working in kids’ TV. I've got a home. My health - more or less. I've had an interesting and varied career. I'm proud of what I've achieved. I've had adventures, and done things that I could never have imagined. Most importantly to me. I'm a good dad, a good step-dad, a good partner, and - I think (I hope) - someone I can look in the eye and say is a good person. I'm even a good ex-husband; for all the tumult when together, I get on well with my kids’ mother.

I wish my mortgage wasn't so eye-watering, and that I had saved a bit more over the years; I'm still playing catch-up from taking my eye off the ball, and not being great with money during all the tumult. Nonetheless, for all that, my life these past several years has been close to what I've always wanted it to be. And yet, something was missing - and I didn't know what it was.

I just knew that there was some part of me that wasn't being satisfied. I felt I needed a hobby, something beyond eating and watching telly. I just couldn't think of one which felt right. Collecting toby jugs wasn't me.

After a life spent in and around music Roy Weard has finally written it all down. From his beginnings in the folk clubs of the early sixties, to playing the free festivals of the seventies with his own band 'Wooden Lion', to touring as a merchandiser with acts like Santana, The Pink Floyd and Genesis, to fronting cult London bands 'Dogwatch' and 'Roy Weard and Last Post', then touring again as a sound engineer and tour manager for many different bands and solo acts. A wide and varied life - this book spans all of that and more and is freely sprinkled with backstage stories and tales of a life spent on many different roads. It also contains many photographs, mostly taken by Roy, the crews he toured with, or by the fans of his various bands.

Even now he is unable to give up being involved in music. He still fronts the revived band 'That Legendary Wooden Lion', is part of the team that puts on monthly gigs in Brighton and Hove under the name of 'The Real Music Club' and does a weekly one hour radio show on Tuesdays at 4pm on Brighton and Hove Community Radio. As of now, he also writes a regular column in this august publication.

In 1989, after the first few gigs with Steve Harley I called Manfred. With typical caution his opening gambit was, ‘What would you like me to do for you? I should say that I don’t back people’s projects, lend money or give out free studio time.’

I replied that I wanted to do something for him and arranged to meet him at the Workhouse Studio. He had not been on tour for a couple of years and I asked him if I could be considered to do the sound for him should he go out. I felt that a couple of tours with Harley, and generally good reviews for those, would stand me in enough stead to get a chance at the job. As it was he was not going on tour, but since Harley was doing the Dominion Theatre at the end of the next tour I invited him along anyway. He seemed favourably impressed with the sound and said he would definitely talk to me should he go on tour.

This did not happen for another year, and when the call came I was away on tour with Don. This meant that I could not do the production rehearsals or the meetings that preceded the tour. Manfred did, however, offer me the job of monitor engineer so I went off and did that.

Among the gigs we did were a series of festivals with the Beach Boys and Allman Brothers. At the bar in the hotel, after one of these festivals, Manfred was standing talking to Gregg Allman when a strange expression came over his face and he excused himself and left. He came over and joined us.

‘I was just talking Gregg Allman,’ he said, ‘and he was saying he was much healthier now he had stopped snorting coke, freebasing and injecting heroin. I said that was good and he looked better than the last time I had seen him. He then said that he got all his drugs made up as a suppository now – and offered to make one for me!’

Manfred’s singer, Chris Thompson, had left the band before this series of festivals and, on the previous tour, he had been sharing vocal duties with Noel McKalla, my old friend from the Mezzoforte tour. Noel had taken over all the vocals for these gigs and was sounding pretty good. I recalled that the first time I had heard Noel was when Manfred lent me of copy of an album Noel had made with his old band Moon.
No you will find it is much more than that. There are roughly 10 kronor to the pound.

Oh. That is far too much. You had better cancel it.

It is too late to cancel it,” he said. Noel was beginning to worry now.

We will have to charge you. Who shall we make the bill out to?

By this time Steve was almost bursting with laughter and was having a hard time keeping up the fake accent. Clive said he should pass the phone to him. Steve did this saying ‘One moment Mr McKalla, I will pass you to the hotel manager.’

Clive launched straight into the conversation in a broad cockney voice.

Oi tosh, what’s the problem ’ere. You asked for the pool to be opened and we have booked it. Are we gonna ’ave any bovver with you? Just tell me who to make the bill out to. Shall I make it out to the band?’

Noel agreed and then he hung up. Steve and Clive fell about laughing at this and then decided to call Manfred and tell him. Manfred then called up Noel and started asking him what this bill was all about. They kept him on the hook until later that evening when Steve and Clive confessed. The funny thing was that when they were leaving the hotel, there was a bill for early opening of the pool, but it was nowhere near 10,000 kronor.

The next day we all flew down to Cologne for a show there, and in the band’s dressing room there was a hand basin. We got squares of black gaffa tape and stuck them to the bottom of the sink to look like tiles, made a miniature ladder and a diving board and then a small sign that said ‘Pool Closed’. A few gigs later the crew were all issued with T-shirts that had been made up by the production manager. The front bore a picture of a person diving into a pool, and on the back it said ‘Earthband Pool Attendants’.

Manfred was very keen on swimming at the time and tried to get into the hotel swimming pool in the mornings if there was one. Noel liked this too. We flew to Sweden for a festival there and were met by a female tour representative. On the drive from the airport she was running over the itinerary and said that the band were staying in one hotel, and the crew in another. Noel asked if their hotel had a swimming pool and she said that it didn’t. Noel said that they had to have a pool and could she change the hotel to one that did have one. After a few calls she did that and the crew were moved to the hotel the band would have stayed in, and given the band’s rooms.

The drummer on that tour was Clive Bunker, former drummer of Jethro Tull, and the bass player was Steve Kinch. Steve was in the hotel lobby when Noel came down and asked the receptionist about the pool. The conversation went something like this:

‘Hi, what time does the pool open in the morning?’

‘We don’t usually open the pool until 2pm, sir.’

‘Oh, that is no good. I am with Manfred Mann’s Earthband and Manfred likes to have a swim in the mornings.’

‘I am afraid we don’t have anyone to open it earlier, can’t he have a swim in the afternoon?’

‘We have to be at the soundcheck at 2pm, can’t you see if it can be opened earlier just for us?’

‘I will check it out for you.’

She took his name and room number and went off. After a while she came back again and said they would try to get the attendant in to open the pool at 11am. So far quite ordinary, but Steve had overheard all of this and went up to Clive’s room. They decided to call Noel, and Steve put on a fake Swedish accent.

‘Mr McKalla?’ He started.

‘Yes.’

‘We have arranged for the pool to be open for you. Where shall we send the bill?’

‘Bill?’ said Noel, no one had mentioned a bill. ‘What for?’

‘Well we had to pay the attendant to come in and there are the extra heating costs. Who shall we make it out to?’

‘It won’t be much will it?’

‘It is about 10,000 kronor’ he said.

‘That is about £10 isn’t it?’
Plato

“...for these histories tell of a mighty power which unprovoked made an expedition against the whole of Europe and Asia, and to which your city put an end. This power came forth out of the Atlantic Ocean, for in those days the Atlantic was navigable... Now in this island of Atlantis there was a great and wonderful empire which had rule over the whole island and several others...”

With these words, from the dialogue of Timaeus, written in about 360 BC, the philosopher Plato would unwittingly launch a deluge of speculation, investigation, argument and counter-argument, that has lasted the better part of 2,500 years.

Timaeus and Critias (Penguin Classics)

Plato said that Atlantis came to a catastrophic end about 9,500 BC when a great flood destroyed its cities and culture and all but wiped out its people. It’s capital was called Poseidon, after the sea-god, and it went under the waves "in a single day and night of misfortune."

Later, in another dialogue, Plato went into more detail about what Atlantis might have looked like.

“At the centre of the island, near the sea, was a plain, said to be the most beautiful and fertile of all plains, and near the middle of this plain about fifty stades (9250 m) inland a hill of no great size... There were two rings of land and three of sea, like cartwheels... in the centre was a shrine sacred to Poseidon and Cleito, surrounded by a golden wall through which entry was forbidden.”

What Plato describes at great length is a state not unlike the city states which dominated the Mediterranean in the philosopher’s own day. It is wealthy. It is cultured. It has works of art and imposing public buildings; it is also a war-like state which threatens its neighbours; but there is no hint of any higher technology - none of the gas-balloons and crystal powered TV - which figure in later versions of the story.

It is exactly the kind of state that we can imagine a person living in ancient Greece might picture if he were to speculate about times gone by.
There are no other references to Atlantis in the ancient world that are not informed by Plato’s original story.

Modern day Atlantis

After that Atlantis was all-but forgotten. Until the 19th century, that is, when the Russian mystic and founder of the Theosophy movement, Madame Helena Petrova Blavatsky (1831 - 1891) revived interest in the mythical Island by mentioning it in her first book, Isis Unveiled, published in 1877. She continued her explorations of the idea in her major work, The Secret Doctrine in 1888, in which she gives many more details.

Around the same time, in 1882, US congressman Ignatius L. Donnelly (1831–1901) published his famous Atlantis: the Antediluvian World. Donnelly is usually given credit as the “father of modern Atlantis research” but from the close time connection, it seems possible that Blavatsky inspired him, and it is she who should be credited as the inspiration for the modern Atlantis movement.

In his book Donnelly includes Plato’s work as the starting point for his ideas about Atlantis and seeks to provide evidence that all ancient civilisations owed their knowledge, culture and technologies to an Atlantean past.

Donnelly even theorised that some crops like bananas were first cultivated in Atlantis and selective breeding by Atlantean scientists or farmers developed the seedless form we know today.

The Masters of the Universe do seem to have a steady stream of interesting stories featuring them, their various friends and relations, and alumni. Each week Graham Inglis keeps us up to date with the latest news from the Hawkverse.

A Hawkwind-related benefit auction is being held this week in memory of the recently-deceased space rock illustrator and musician Mark Reiser. All proceeds of the sale will go towards the cost of a double memorial CD, all of the profit from which will go directly to Mark's partner.

The most closely Hawkwind-related item included in the sale is Mark's Lloyd Langton Group poster for Huw's appearance at the 2010 Hawkfest, which was signed by Huw – now also deceased. Mark worked closely with Huw over a period of time and Huw made several guest appearances with Hawkwind.

The auction package also includes various CDs. The Spaceseed CD is "The Fraternal Order" and Mark contributed to the distinctive Spaceseed graphics over many years. That CD sees Spaceseed joined by space rock legends Bridget Wishart (ex-Hawkwind vocalist) and Cyndee Lee Rule (violin).

There's also an Electric Cake Salad CD, a band with whom Mark worked often, and a Spirits Burning CD - "Starhawk".

Printed material is also included and features Mark's 14-page concert programme for the 2009 Space Ritual band's 'Barney Bubbles' gig.

Meanwhile, as reported last week, an albums ranking list on the website ranker.com that allows Hawkwind fans to rate the various studio albums still hasn't produced any surprises at the top of the chart. The "Warrior" album is still being ranked first among equals, with "Quark", "Doremi" and "Mountain Grill" forming a fairly orderly queue behind it, with only a minimum of jostling.

More of a surprise is that the 1977/1978 Hawkwind/Hawklords release "Weird 2" has crept up to No. 12 in that chart, and the fairly recent album "Spacebrock" is also comfortably in the Top Twenty.

JONATHAN DOWNES
Martin Springett was born in Crayford, Kent, England, in 1947. He studied art (that is he learned to play the Guitar) for two semesters at the Brassey School of Art in Hastings, Sussex. He emigrated to the West Coast of Canada in 1965, but returned to the UK in 1973 to pursue music in various bands. He spent time in Germany, and toured through Europe.

While in London Martin started to illustrate and design record covers for Columbia records. Upon his return to Vancouver, Martin carried on with music and illustrated various books and magazines. In 1978 he moved to Toronto, maintaining activity in every area where illustration is required. He released his own album, "The Gardening Club", in 1983.

In 1984 Martin was commissioned to illustrate the cover of "The Summer Tree" by Guy Gavriel Kay. This and the subsequent volumes of The Fionavar Tapestry Trilogy were published around the world along with Martin's covers. Martin continued his work in fantasy illustration, illustrating many covers for fantasy novels, including "The Traveller In Black" by John Brunner. In 1990 he illustrated his first children's book, "Mei Ming and the Dragon's Daughter" written by Lydia Bailey. Martin has just finished illustrating his sixth children's book, called "The Follower" by Richard Thompson. He has been nominated for various awards, including the Governor Generals Award For Illustration. He has won the Aurora Award For Excellence in Fantasy Art, and two Silver Awards from the Art Directors Club of Toronto and Best Classical Record Cover of The Year Award (UK).

Martin still pursues the Musical Muse, recently producing a new CD. "Blue Evening" with his band "FREEFALL", an independent, instrumental album called "Rough Magic"; a collection of explorations on the guitar, and a collection of tunes inspired by the writings of Guy Gavriel Kay called "Bright Weaving"

Rob Ayling writes:

"Thom the World poet is an old mate of mine from way back in my history. Even pre-dating Voiceprint, when I was running "Otter Songs" and Tom's poetry tapes and guest appearances with Daevid Allen, Gilli Smyth Mother Gong are well known and highly regarded. It just felt right to include a daily poem from Thom on our Gonzo blog and when I approached him to do so, he replied with in seconds!!! Thom is a great talent and just wants to spread poetry, light and positive energy across the globe. If we at Gonzo can help him do that - why not? why not indeed!!"

Once I carried out that most decadent of rock and roll acts, and wrecked a hotel room. Although I must say that I had horrible provocation. I had been invited up to London to appear on a Channel Five TV show, nearly twenty years ago. At the time I had no money whatsoever, and only accepted the invitation to appear on the aforementioned show, because they promised to buy me a slap up dinner, and a full English breakfast, as well as paying me thirty quid for the privilege of talking esoteric bollocks for three minutes. But when I got there, I was told that budget cuts meant that they would not be buying me an evening meal, and that I would have to wait three months for my thirty quid. So I wrecked the hotel room that had been booked on their account, and charged up £120 worth of breakfast, including champagne and oysters which I truly didn’t want.

That learned ‘em.

It is strange how one changes as one gets older. When I was younger, so much younger than today, I read the accounts of people like Keith Moon destroying hotel rooms for the lolz, and laughed outrageously. Now, only a few years shy of sixty I find myself wincing every time that I think of my only foray into room wrecking, and rather than laughing at the accounts of Keith Moon’s destructive misbehaviour that are chronicled in this book, I only feel sad. Because what for years people have put down as “Keith being Keith” were actually signs of a mental health problem spiralling out of control.

It is surprising how many people have written memoirs about Keith Moon, and totally failed to draw that conclusion. His one time assistant, Peter “Dougal” Butler wrote (although two other authors are given co-writer credits) a quite entertaining book about his time with Moon. However, it reads like Confessions of a Windowcleaner with all sorts of passages featuring Cockney rhyming slang, and estuarine patois to surreal effect. One could almost imagine it being read as an audiobook by Dick Van Dyke in his best Mary Poppins chimneysweep voice.

Until I read this excellent book, the best biography of The Who that I had read was Before I get old by Dave Marsh, but - at least as far as Moon is concerned - this book beats it hands down.

I met Tony Fletcher once, years ago, when his Jamming record label had a showcase at a venue in North Devon, and I was ligging like mad, trying to get a record contract for a punk band I was managing. Born in Yorkshire,
England, Fletcher was inspired by the London punk rock movement and started a fanzine as a thirteen-year-old schoolboy which he named Jamming! Founded in 1977 the magazine began as a school-printed fanzine and in 1978, with the fifth issue, featuring interviews with Paul Weller, Adam Ant and John Peel, adopted professional printing and wider distribution. And in 1978 he had his only meeting with the subject of this excellent and insightful biography.

This fateful meeting occurred in London in 1978 when Fletcher was 14. Fletcher had passed a copy of his fanzine to Moon to autograph. Moon chatted with Fletcher at length and invited the boy to visit his current abode, a flat in Mayfair owned by the American singer Harry Nilsson so he could read the magazine at a future date. Fletcher did visit the flat but received no response when he knocked on the door. Just a few weeks later Keith Moon would be dead.

One of the most impressive things about this book is the way that Fletcher refutes some of the many myths that have risen up about Moon the Loon. For example, that he drove a Rolls Royce into a Michigan hotel swimming pool during his 21st birthday party. But even now the story refuses to die with even Roger Daltrey begging to differ. "I saw it. We paid the bill (for the damages). It was $50,000. It's vague now, but I just remember the car in the pool. And the chaos. And Keith being rushed off to the dentist after being arrested because he knocked his front tooth out... But then I read in the biography that never happened, so maybe I've been living someone else's life, I don't know."

Another legendary exploit took place during the 1973 Quadrophenia tour, at the Who’s debut US date at the Cow Palace in Daly City, California, where Moon ingested a mixture of tranquillisers and brandy. During the concert, Moon passed out on his drum kit during "Won’t Get Fooled Again." The band stopped playing, and a group of roadies carried Moon offstage. They gave him a shower and an injection of cortisone, sending him back onstage after a thirty-minute delay. Moon passed out again during "Magic Bus," and was again removed from the stage. The band continued without him for several songs before Townshend asked, "Can anyone play the drums? – I mean somebody good?" A drummer in the audience, Scot Halpin, came up and played the rest of the show.

What ho chaps. Another jolly jape by Moon the Loon, but I kicked people out of my band for less.

One of the things that becomes ever more apparent, the more that one goes into the Keith Moon story, is that - for most bands - he would have been a terrible drummer. He wasn’t a timekeeper; John Entwistle and Pete Townshend carried out that role in the band. If anything he was a melody player, but the truth is - Moon’s own eccentric genius is pretty damn well impossible to analyse. But is is certain that in the thirty eight years since his death The Who have never sounded as good as they did, even on mediocre tracks recorded with him.

And Moon’s mental health? It seems that Moon himself knew all along that there was something wrong:

"When you’ve got money and you do the kind of things I get up to, people laugh and say that you're eccentric, which is a polite way of saying you're fucking mad."

—Keith Moon

The trouble is, When Keith Moon said that, people didn’t realise he was telling the literal truth. By the time that they did, it was too late:
In Victorian times every well-bred Gentleman had a 'Cabinet of Curiosities'; a collection of peculiar odds and sods, usually housed in a finely made cabinet with a glass door. These could include anything from Natural History specimens to historical artefacts.

There has always been something of the Victorian amateur naturalist about me, and I have a houseful of arcane objects; some completely worthless, others decidedly not, but all precious to me for the memories they hold.

But people send me lots of pictures of interesting, and, may I say, peculiar things. But once again this week it is over to my lovely wife...

It would appear that Sotheby’s have a major music-themed auction coming up by the look of the some of the listings this week. I have included a few of them, essentially on a first seen, first noted basis. The prices make your eyes water, your wallet curl up in fright, your credit card to begin melting at one corner, and – as if those were not enough – along comes your bank manager in your dreams, who stands in front of you wagging a threatening finger of one hand, whilst tapping his Burton trousers with the other hand, whilst firmly gripping a tightly plaited cat o’ nine tails. (I will concede here that some of you may, of course, think of this as a dream, whilst others would call it a nightmare). Who knows?

Anyway, so as to avoid any embarrassing confessions, let’s get going shall we?

Michael Jackson Blood on the Dancefloor VIDEO used beads Juliens + AUTOGRAPH MJ - US $22,500.00

“This is an interesting opportunity for investors, fans, merchandisers, perhaps even for a museum, for sale here. The whole lot of Authentic Blood on the Dancefloor Video used beads, with this you have a real interesting prop.

What you are purchasing is the beads that I have left from the lot that I bought a long time ago. You can divide it into several pieces. Check the short film, the red beads are shown most in the video, fitting the whole theme of course. You can spot them in the first 30 seconds and you’ll see them in the second and third minute. In this purchase you will get the MJ signed inventory sheets and the Autograph, plus the Juliens Auctions Card, and of course the boxes filled with beads used in the video.

When purchasing this lot, you will get:
15 red strands of approx. average of 3 meter each strand
10 purple strands of approx. 2 - 3 meter average
8 silver strands of approx. 2 - 3 meter average
6 strands of the blue pearls as I call them (not shown in video; probably used for the CD design see cd)
And some of the spinners as I call them big beads with gold chains attached in green, blue and orange color, 10 spinners (not strands) of each color.
The documents signed by MJ and the autograph. The original boxes that they stored all these items.
Stray into the woods and forests and you will enter into another world; a world of creatures that live by their own rules, protect their own kind with fierceness, and view all strangers who venture under the protective boughs with deep suspicion. Tread the forest floor with care, for this is also the home of the hairy man - the wildman of the woods. Is he a man? Is he a beast? Is he something in between? Whatever he is, he is spoken about by humans in hushed voices. They are scared of him and they tell tales of him to their children to scare them from entering the hushed darkness of the tree kingdoms. They call him many names; the woodwose, the wudawasa, the wodwos amongst them. The bane of a high-born daughter takes her unintentionally through such a forest on her last journey as a single woman to wed the man of her father's choice. Imposters from another land tramp through such a forest on a mission of their own, killing everything that comes across their path. The lives of some of the creatures that dwell in this place become unavoidably entwined with both these trespassers. The lives of some will change. Some will cease completely.
Wow the cost of tickets sure has gone up from those heady days of £1.50p entry into Brunel University to see the likes of Genesis and Family. And does that really say in the small print ‘No Reselling’? Ooops naughty naughty.

Well folks, I am going back to my dream...I mean nightmare.

This book, which was released by Gonzo last year is an erudite catalogue of some of the most peculiar records ever made. The authors have lined up, described and put into context 500 "albums" in the expectation that those of you who can't help yourselves when it comes to finding and collecting music will benefit from these efforts in two ways.

- Firstly, you'll know you are not alone.
- Secondly, we hope that some of the work leads you to new discoveries, and makes your life slightly better as a result.

Each issue we are featuring one of these remarkable and peculiar records in a crass attempt to flog you the book.

Comets on Fire: Blue Cathedral (Sub Pop, 2004)

What?
Difficult third album makes a virtue of achieving a difficult goal.

For all its out-there, alternative, self-indulgent chic this outré epic packs the riveting tension of many famed outsider classics, like Hawkwind’s Space Ritual or The Boredoms’ Super æ, in presenting fleeting seconds of randomly assembled sounds, forever threatening to disappear into its own indulgence and still emerging over its full-length as a supreme achievement of ambition and well-honed talent. Its predecessor – Field Recordings From the Sun – was an unrepentant psychedelic attack seeking to take no prisoners. A fleeting exposure to the heavy guitar riffs and vocal delays of “Whisky River” might suggest we’re back in the same territory. But with additional members, liberal sax breaks and — shock, horror! — delicate moments of melody, Blue Cathedral is WAY more than that. As All Music Guide put it: “One of the most captivating things… is how it wedes the band's garagey MC5 meets Hawkwind attack with a more textural, spacious approach that includes keyboards up front much of the time -- as in organs and pianos adding some Ummagumma-Atom Heart Mother-ish Pink Floyd sounds to the cauldron.”

First half-decade Floyd are a touchstone, especially when a track like “Pussy Foot the Duke” wanders into wistful territory without suggesting for one second it is also wandering anywhere near the mainstream. Blue Cathedral references sonic territory more usually inhabited by the biggest selling prog artists but seldom sounds like a sell-out. For starters a gem like “Organs” runs well short of two minutes whilst the closing blunderbuss, “Blue Tomb,” is a tad over ten minutes. They certainly weren’t out to do radio programmers any favours with either of those. The drenching of much of the sound in echoplex (in other words delays and looping) also makes for an uncompromising state of affairs, even when the music segues into the dreamy territory visited in the middle of “Wild Whisky,” with its blissed guitar and Atom Heart/ Meddle… Floyd vibe. The fact that two of the eight tracks on offer name-check whisky may also be a sign that nobody involved sought a soft option. Blue Cathedral ranks with Steven Jesse Bernstein’s Prison as a challenging but ultimately very accessible Sub Pop triumph.
Gregg Kofi Brown has transcended many genres of music...

Rock ‘n’ Roll and UFOs is an anthology of music from Gregg Kofi Brown’s career and contains previous unreleased songs, remixes and demos, with many guest musicians and artists such as Sting guitarist Dominic Miller, Bomb da Bass, Osibisa, the cast of the Who’s Tommy, The Chimes’ Pauline Henry, the Who’s former keyboard guru John Rabbit Bundrick and Seal guitarist Gus Isidore.

The CD is a companion to Gregg Kofi Brown’s autobiography of the same name which covers his early career in Los Angeles and London. From his first pro tour with Joe Cocker and Eric Burdon to close encounters of a third kind in a California desert and his adventures touring the world with African rock pioneers Osibisa. His journey includes starring in hit West end productions in London, recording and touring with infamous rock bands like Hanoi Rocks and the Members.

His first tour in Gambia and Senegal West Africa supporting African superstar Youssou N’dour is well documented, as is his work in the African and West Indian music scene in the UK.

The last few years has seen Kofi perform with Damon Alban’s African Express and collaborate live with Amadou & Mariam featuring Beth Orton.

M. A. RAINES
We are in mourning this week. For the past ten years we have been the proud custodians of a family of Typhlonectes natans, a small wormlike amphibian from the muddy rivers of Venezuela. We were one of the few people in this country ever to have bred them, and - I believe - that we were in possession of the only breeding colony in the UK.

On Tuesday, Graham was doing the animal round as normal, when he found that there had been a power outage in the night and as a result the whole colony was dead.

Thank you very much to everyone who wrote to me commiserating with our loss of the only breeding colony of Rio Cauca Caecilians in the UK. I truly appreciate your sympathy and kindness.

We are all devastated, and I am afraid that this and the journalistic fallout following Greg Lake's untimely death has put paid to my normal body clock for the whole week.

A major visit from my Russian friend Mr Smirnoff didn't help as much as I had hoped. I had to be up early for a podiatrist appointment, and so I only had about an hour and a half sleep last night. I am functioning today on coffee and adrenaline.

But life goes on. One has to pick one's self up, dust one's self down and get on with it. And that is exactly what we are doing.

But nobody ever said that it was going to be easy.
